

The way I see it:

A photographic exploration of housing and health among people living with HIV in Vancouver

“The way I see it” is a photography project that examines the impact of housing on health as seen through the eyes of people living with HIV and AIDS in Vancouver.

Nine Community Researchers – people living with HIV and passionate about housing research and advocacy – share their photos and stories in an exhibit in the Woodward's atrium, April 3rd – 15th.

Community Researchers will present their stories and photos:

When:

April 12th 2012

6:30pm – 8:30pm

Where:

W2 media café

111 West Hastings St.

(@ Abbott)

Hear and see the realities for yourself. Be a part of the dialogue.

Together, we will work towards positive change in our communities.

Reception will include light refreshments and an opportunity to meet with the community researchers. This free event is open to the public and requires pre-registration. To RSVP or for more information, please contact us by phone 604.806.8781 or email surita_parashar@sfu.ca
